

Nearly all primates live in dense, tropical forests where they spend most of their time climbing through the trees looking for food.

Primatologists need to have a keen eye when trying to spot them in the trees!

It can be very difficult sometimes as primates can be small and well hidden. Their fur colour helps keep them hidden too.

After all, no one wants to draw attention to themselves when they might end up as someone's dinner!

Imagine you're a primatologist...

Can you find the hidden primates?

There's 10 of each to find.

Capuchin monkeys live in tropical forests of South America

Chimpanzees live in dense forests of central Africa
